Loans that change their spots

| RELATIONSHIPS between banks and big cornpanies have become increasingly fragile over the past few years. Most banks have increas. moly felt the need to pursue of consequences, not all of them pleasant. for companies. Banks have. for example. nesses, such as lnvestment banking. It has been quite com. investment banking subsidiaries to give advice to a bidder in a takeover battle whose target has beed one of the bank's wn clients.  Neediess to say, the client under attack is normally furi. ous at what it sees as a breach of trust - the bank's arguruent that the investment hanking subsidiary is acting as an inde pendent entry, behind a "Chinese Wall", cuts no ice.  More recently, investment banking habits have been hav- ing an even more profound ing an even more profound effect on the relationship between banker and corporate client.  all assets in thenkers regard all assets in their halance sheets as tradeable. Trading these assets is normally easy. because most of the assets are in the form of securities.  However, only a relatively swall propartion ar tbe assets of most hanks are securites. Most of their balance sheets consist of loans, either to com. panes or indiviuals, whicb have traditlonally not heen tradeable.  In the past, when a hank made a loan to a company or individual it was in effect contracting to maintain a relationship with tba borrower till the loan was repaid. But not any longer. Many banks now want to be able to sell these loans. The reason for thiss change is that the worldwide recession has left banks with uttle spare capital The ability to trade in loans allows a bank to raptaly adjust the stze of its balance sheet to a level best suited to Its capital resources.  Over the past decade, three assets have grown up. Two these are now relatively well established: the market in bank loans to less developed countries and the mariket in mortgages and consumer loans, repackaged as secarities. or securitised.  However, a third market is developing, the existence of | Pen Kerte selling the debt may lompe Which is having a very profound effect on the traditional relationshlp between banks and their is a market in distressed corporate debt, or loans to companies which are experien. cing financial difficulties. Until recently, when a company had financial problems, it tiate a debt restructuring with the bank or banks which had originally granted ts loan  However, a number of com. panies in dificulties bave shock - that thetr banks have sold their loans to other financial institutions. They tended to sell their participa. tions in syndicated loans writh which they did not have a with which they did not have a close relationship. However, over  some of the biggest US banks. Including Citicorp. Wells Fargo and First Chicago. have started larly of loans to property companies.  "Some of the sellers in the past year were tha agents for loans," said Mr Lupori. in other words, banks have sold their interest in loans to companies pany quite well.  Clticorp has formally recognised that banks have now by producing an index of bank loans to companies, which in theory allows banks to compare the return of making loans to companies with the returns available from investing in securitias.  The leading brokers in the debt, Whitman, Goldman Sachs and Oppenheimer, are now trying to devetop the mar one new UK firm, Klesch and | Company. specialising in tbe market.  The UK market is still small. Like the US miarket in its early days, seliers are often foreign banks with brancbes inr London - and they have tended to selt their debt participations in companies with wilch they do not have a close relationship.  But there have been trades in the debt of several compas nies in difficulties, including Maxwelt Communications Corporation, Brent Walker, Isosce- les, WPP, Guinness Peat Aviatlon, Eurotunnel. Heron and Polly Peck.  UK banks say they are hesitant to enter this market. --It is not something we would rule out," said Lord Alexander. ster Bank, the UKs second higsest bank.  An additional factor in the slow growth of the market has been that UK investment institutions, unlike their US coumterparts, have not yet emerged as very enthusiastic buyers of the debt. However, they are bsing lohbied intensively by the hrokers.  UK marke for believing that take of has been tha changing Eattitude of the Bank of Iss associate director, Mr Pen Kent, said in a speech last cerned that selling the debt of a trouhled company could "Selling debt in response to news that a company is in diff. one of the basic tenets of the London Approach [which is a Bank of England sponsored code of conduct for banks involved in reacuing a com-  panyl.".
